Philosophy School President!

Communication.

As perhaps the most important tenet of all philosophy, communication is key to fostering a thriving school and student body.

As an approachable and friendly face, I'd encourage discussion between all years and act as a channel for communication between staff and students

Through formal consultations and more informal opportunities for feedback, we can facilitate an even stronger dialogue within our school.

Connection.

Whilst we may be a collection of academic philosophers, this doesn't mean we don't know how to have fun!

After such a disrupted and all together unusual year, we begin to appreciate the time we spend together even more.

In the coming academic year, I hope to organise regular social events within the School of Philosophy that allow us to connect with each other outside of lecture halls and seminar rooms.

Community.

Through regular social events, open and honest channels of communication, and approachability as President, I hope to foster an even greater sense of community and support within the School for all staff and students.

It is my goal that when we can finally all meet each other again that we can continue to support one another, both in learning and within the wider university community.

Together, and with each other's support, we can strive to achieve even greater at Edgecliffe and, of course, beyond.
